Trains on the average consist of 100 axles, and most cars have two axles. An axle carries roughly seven to eight tons. Two-axle cars haul 15 tons; three-axle cars, 25 tons. The trains listed above include shipments crossing over at the regular Oder-Neisse border points and those going to the Baltic Sea ports for transshipment to Russia by sea. They do not include cargo directly intended for Poland and other eastern satellite countries.

2. The number of serviceable passenger coaches in use and available for use in the Soviet Zone on 15 May 1950 was 11,156.
3. The Reichsbahn has recently taken over operation of the narrow gauge railway lines of Wernigerode, Gernrode and Brockenbahn.
4. For the development of the Berlin freight belt line called the "Güterausseiring" DM 32 million has been allocated to improve the stretch between Marzahn and Oranienburg. The appropriation has been broken down as follows:

Of this total, nearly DM-8,000,000 had already been paid out by the end of 1949 for this project.

- Two kilometers, from Zossen to Rabendorf, on a main line into Berlin from the South has been converted to double track.
- The freight line from Schönhauser Allee to Pankow is to be electrified with the idea of eventually running the S-Bahn over it.
- An electric S-Bahn line running between Grünau and Königswusterhausen was scheduled to be in operation by 1 September 1950. This, however, will be impossible since right-of-way signals and safety controls have not been procured.
- The line between Rostock and Warnemünde is to be double-tracked. A new passenger-freight station will be built just south of Rostock.
- Following are listed the appropriations made for specific improvements. For a number of these work was already begun in 1949.
